“The Worst Maybe Over”

Declines in freight in both domestic and international businesses are stabilizing. The problem is volumes, which remain sluggish. Consumer spending on durable goods will help increase freight volumes. Durable goods such as furniture and appliances will help freight supply chains. Some trucking companies are growing their business despite the economic downturn.

Upturn in wholesale and manufacturing levels will help freight volumes for the coming 2010. Consumer spending will increase on durable goods. Freight recovery will occur first at the retail level and flow upstream to wholesale and manufacturing.
